Preface

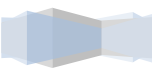

There is a girl, and then there is a ‘weirdo.’ He is not actually a ‘weirdo,’ but he is one because she feels that he is a ‘weirdo.’ ‘Asshole’ to be specific.

The conflict isn’t any great, and there is nothing mysterious.

There is no random or known character death, neither entry of a villain. There is no love triangle nor confusion. Parental or inter-caste issues? Nope, that’s not there too. Everything is crystal clear, and of course, it’s a love story.

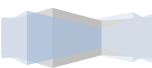

The premise is that there is a girl and there is a boy. I guess that is sufficient to make a good (I know that the good here is questionable, but every author has the right to feel good, I think) love story. It never gets old. Does it? However and but, this one has buckets of however’s and but’s.

One

The First Smelly Step

“Bat shit.”

If I had to sum up my first year of degree experience, that’s exactly and precisely what I would call it. Surprisingly, I never realized how a year went by. At first, it was about getting accustomed to the college environment. Then, there was no second. Getting accustomed to the college environment was all I had for one entire year.

Say, for example, the admission process. In my personal opinion, being an unbiased third party observer, the process is ‘don't-ask-me-how-much’ useless. It could have been straightforward, more accessible, easeful, hands down! Again, as I said, there seem to be a lot of cosmetics in the process, and trust me, they are useless. As useless as the campus drinking water facility.

I got an application installed for the admission process. Okay, that says two things.

- a. The process is long, we might get messed up and hence the app.
- b. The campus is huge, we might get messed up and hence the app.

However, the app was ‘don’t-get-me-started-on-that!’ I had to ask people still where to move and what to do. Instead, they would have invested time in making the process simpler by cutting down a few things from the process. God knows why there were so many channels of so many colors. Is it a challan? Or a channel? I always get confused. Damn it. Who cares! Some of them are still lying on my study desk, and I am not sure what to do with them. Oh, now I know - put them in the dustbin.

Then, all these shaky lectures, shaky classes they don’t allow us to breathe. They just gave assignments, and then it felt like all I did for an entire year was to give exams. They have different names for it but trust me, all it has is:

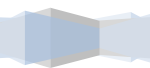

- We study
- We work
- We discuss
- We prepare
- We write
- We learn
- They evaluate(gosh, if they did that one job correctly!) and give grades (LOL)

I just don’t know why I am paying so much for all this! I wish I could get homeschooled. I so wish. Thank God there is a good canteen. I mean food. I mean the canteen. Oh, now, as I see, they both are different. The canteen is good – if you know what I mean! No comments on the food.

Assholes!

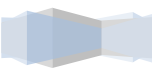

Two

Too Much Me!

I have always been a sincere student. Always on time for classes, did my assignments well before the deadline, made proper class notes, always occupied first or the second bench, helped my friends during exams, etc etc, you name it, and I happily did it. Okay, that was till my class 12. But then, this degree, I wanted to and could not.

I always used to be on time, and then these Prof's used to come late and rarely on time. I lost my interest. I used to do my assignments way before time, and then the evaluation was meaningless, for it was never evaluated. I did not have any motivation to do them. Okay, if you want to lecture me that it's for my good and I need those knowledge etc etc., NO. The assignments were pretty lame.

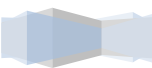

Oh my god, I used to make notes, but then, why would I prepare one for the contents read from the slides? For the very same reason, it was torture to sit on the first bench. I don't know when 'reading slides' became part of the teaching process. We have forgotten to read textbooks. I am not even sure if the contents of the slide were correct. In one of the classes, there was a slide that said – 'we should always be up to date,' and that slide was dated four years old. I am sure the benches cried every day. I quote the same reason for the rapid wear and tear. That is also precisely the reason why students start getting creative on desks, walls, last pages, etc. There was no question of helping my friends because I myself needed that the most.

You might want to laugh, but that is specifically how much I had changed. I had lost interest in all of my hobbies. I hardly got time to listen to music; I could not read newspapers, I had less idea on movies released, to say, I felt like I was in a box and that box was teleported to 1540. Forwards that came on WhatsApp was my only 'news' source of information, and every single time it was fake! I had issues with WhatsApp university and my university as well.

In one year, I had turned into a complaint box. My frequency to utter 'assholes' had seen an exponential increase. The worst part is that I did that loud, and many would have mouthed that I had a bad character. Who cares!?? (I do! Cries in silence!)

Three

Ends, Friends

Let me tell you; this whole education thing is a scam. I worked my ass off for my tenth. Then, the pre-university colleges had their entrance exams to be qualified. There goes all the effort in vain. Then, call it my stupidity; I worked my ass off again for the next two years. I had grown bone-thin with no proper food and sleep. All that for what? For nothing. For non-sense.

I am now sure my parents are going to get me married soon after graduation. They already keep talking about that. The day they do it in front of me, the day there will be a hurricane at home. I promise you that. I plan to throw some glass pots, break a window, bang the door hard multiple times and tear off some college books.

Maybe I will have to create a massive scene at home, threaten a little, and do a considerable amount of emotional drama to allow me to work for at least 1-2 years. That will again happen if I get placed. Looking at the way things are progressing now, LOL, I can only laugh at myself. May be first years are like that. So said one of my school seniors. This is what we conversed:

“Hey, I find this first-year nuts!”

“Everyone feels that.”

"I don't know where we are heading."

"Everyone feels that" (smiles)

"I don't know why and what are we learning."

"Everyone feels that."

"Is that all you have?"

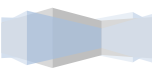

"Everyone has only that."

"Okay. That was helpful. Bye and NO thanks."

"Bye." (stands with a weird face)

What a throw-away senior. She was not like this when at school. Asshole. Ah, I again blame the university.

By the way, I like how my friends are killing my identity. My name is Drishti, and 'macha', 'le', 'ishtya', 'dabba' etc. are some names that my friends call me with. I wonder how and why they were coined, but someone makes it up, and everyone else follows that. Okay, let me be honest. I have made some terrific friends over time. Or maybe, the hostel is pathetic that it eventually and inevitably turned us into best friends. Like last time it rained, room number 310 to 317, the ones that are supposed to be modern architectures, the ones which in-fact have few civil and architecture students, had all the rainwater dancing inside. There was no power, and the entire hostel had to help them out to clean up and throw all the logged water out. Some lost the class notes and were least concerned as there was nothing really 'I want to read that again' in it.

Four

Crush at First Sight

Gosh, what a show-off! That's unerringly what I felt for Charan when he campaigned for class representative elections. Second-year, we had entered our departments. Nothing much had changed with respect to classes, they were the same old shit, but the set of students (yes, we had a few stinky ones) had changed.

I did not hate Charan, but equally, I did not like him either. He was my school mate, and I never had I ever imagined that he would make up till college. He had the worst handwriting ever, for he used to write as if he had dyslexia. He used to always come late to class. He used to stand and watch girls at school near the gate. That's all and the only memory I have about him. I had this hunch that he would become a watchman. Someday.

That's the same old owl, was now campaigning for class election. Gosh! And he looked different. He had grown a beard and had improved in dressing sense. Oh, wait. He had grown a beard. I can't comment on dressing sense as uniforms are all we had in schools. However, my million dollar question is, 'where was he for the last year?' I never noticed him on the campus. Maybe there was no need to see, that's why I did not. But how did he make it to college? We both in the same college? Gosh, that proves my studies and hard work are gutters. I hope and wish he does not remember me. He used to ask for my notes, and I was pretty scared to give him. I just could not trust him with my notes. I felt he would lose it and give a fuck about it.

Now, because I am talking way too much about Charan, it does not mean I have a crush on him. I have nothing for him, and it's rare to have that. Neither hate nor like. I don't think he deserves anything from me. Okay, let me get this straight.

“Charan would not care and give a damn about what I would think about him.” LOL. And I don't care. Okay, maybe a little. Okay, NO. I DON'T CARE! Gosh, I hope he won't be elected as CR. He already has lost one vote!

Okay, truth is truth. He looked hot in the beard. I guess he hits the gym. Asshole.

Five

Gosh, He Remembers me!

He comes up to the class front to deliver his ‘vote for me’ speech, and in it, he includes me. When did he even see me? How does he remember me? Do I look the same as I was in school? Why does he also remember me? He says – ‘Drishti, my old school friend, will vote for me.’ He did that for a few others with other reasons. He gave an impressive speech. He should have made to write on the board, for that is how his true colors would come out.

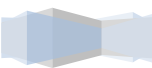

Then the second one came on stage. ROFL. He was a hosteller. But somehow, I did not like his attitude. No reasons said and done, sure no vote for him, and many others felt that. He was just – don’t ask what, but maybe a jerk. The third one was this girl. I won’t tell her name for she might read this, she anyways would know, but she was another useless. Most of us hated her. Just the girl gang things. No wonder she would eat panipuri daily. Most of we girls had an eye message passed on that we would not be voting her. It was now between Charan and the other guy. Megha kinda tells it loud that – ‘let’s vote for that bearded guy! He is hot!’

We all vote. I hate to say that I voted for Charan. He was the only reasonable option we had. I hope he will keep us sane by canceling all the classes in need. Anyways we got to read at home and prepare ourselves. Why warm the benches when we can comfortably lie on the bed? Legit! Charan wins with a close margin. Maybe because of our girl gang votes. Okay, no maybe, it was sure was for it was a very close call. Then, Charan gives a winning speech that was totally not required. Asshole.

Second-year seems no much different. The classes are almost the same. It looks like we need to manage most of the things on our own. We shall as we are used to it. But somehow things are little different because the course titles make a bit more sense than the ones from the first year. Well, there are also other useful things. Well, if you think I am talking about hot beard guy, nopes. He is still an asshole.

Six

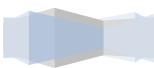

You name it, We have it

Then comes this season of WhatsApp groups. We have one official group, and then we have another unofficial class group. Then, Sneha heard from her boyfriend that there was another boy's only group. We created another girl's only group. Do they think only boys share nonveg messages? Assholes. They don't know they also originate from the girl's hostel. Then we have another group without Lata because she was sharing our group screenshots to guys. Then we friends have our own group. Then we had to create another without Nitya because she used to forward every annoying thing into the group, and it was annoying. We had to create one without her and mute the group she was in. We had another hostel girl's only group. We had course wise team groups. Then sometimes groups got created because there was a birthday plan made. Ask not what else, but there were a hell lot of groups. It was a mess.

Most of the groups became dead silent after a week of creation. God knows the number and the names that were given. If one semester had all this, I can't imagine what the entire degree tenure will bring. I hope my phone dies and I would never bother for it.

The only active groups then were the class official group and unofficial groups. One professor in the official group always used to post something or the other. Course-related. Some of them to impress him used to respond to his messages, mostly smileys. He often used to crack lame jokes. Such a wuss. Then it all got stopped after a while. However, the professor did not stop posting the course assignments and deadlines. We only bothered when CR posted it, unofficial class group, reminding it about the deadline. Vijay used to create a lot of memes on daily happenings. He kept the group always active. He sometimes used to live record class sessions and annotate them. The unofficial group was fun. It had birthday wishes, class cancellations, test postponements, holiday circulars, etc. other good news. Most important of all, through the group, I got to save Charan's number. Hey, he was the class CR. I got to keep his number. Would not I? I could pest him as well. I would want to. Some day!

Seven

Charan – No Big Deal!

Shut up!

Charan has been a popular class talk. I got to know he is a payment seat. No prizes for whoever dig out that information. He walks to class every day. Two kilometers. No, not that he cannot afford a bike, but he quotes it as health-conscious.

I seriously wonder why and how! Now that I have saved his number, I can see his WhatsApp status. When I am able to see that, it means he has saved my number too. Idiot. Why did he save my number? I am sure he would have saved every girl's number.

No. he has not. Smitha was complaining that she was not able to see his status. I said 'good for you,' but she was not happy. Then, such a pervert. He has saved a handful of girl's numbers. No cheers for making into his list. He is not Mr.World or something. Just another guy who from 'one fine day has started looking good!'. I guess it's just the teenage hormones. People are so spoilt I say, they talk pretty and petty much every nonsense.

I am not sure why he eats momos often. He keeps posting those pictures. I don't know why and how he likes it. No, it's not my conclusion that he likes it and is his favorite. He himself posts those pictures saying they are his favorites. I did try it once, and I felt it was 'okay-okay.' Aloo parathas are still my favorite.

I am not sure why he likes black. Again, not that it's my own analysis and derivation. He wears black at least 4 days a week. The other remaining days still have some black shades to them. I did purchase a new black dress recently. Not that he wears but that black dress was really nice. Is it with all the guys that they have a craze for shoes? I have seen at least 6 or 7 with Charan. They are usually unusually dirty, maybe because he walks. It looks like he washes them often. They are all different shades and variations.

My friends often complain to me that I observe Charan a lot, but no. I am even for everyone. Like I really like this thing about Harish. He has this, this lovely quality. Then about Mahesh, he is good at this. This, how do I say that? 'This,' you know! We all know! Assholes.

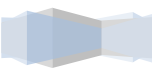

Eight

Con-fessions

There is a con, already. I don't see any pros. I guess every university has multiple pages. There is this one page that is popular and running for ages. I have, however, noticed that most die in a few months as the admins eventually become inactive.

I don't like such things. I have seen my friends posting confessions for themselves. That is so mean and shameless. It is also popular in a guy's community. They do it for friends and tease them in public. Confessions is a small community as compared to university strength. I don't know what others are busy with!

I did send a confession on Charan, and it never got posted. I guess so. Or maybe it got posted late, and I did not take trouble in looking it further. It was no appreciation confession. I just said – 'black and perfect.' I know it nowhere on earth would hint for him. But, he would know. Here is the story. He had posted in the group asking us all to wear black to show homage to attack that happened in the north part of the country and for lost lives in the terror attack. My confession had multiple meanings. Above all, I just wanted to appreciate his thought process.

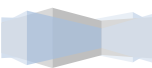

Then, my friends also told me there was a confession for me. I never bothered to read it even out of curiosity. I hope it was a prank pulled out from someone from my own gang. Why bother so much for internal affairs? I just ignored it like a queen who doesn't care.

Confession culture is good, but I don't like it. Not everyone takes it the same way, and it can lead to unwanted things. I don't support any such matters. I even don't like the troll culture. It's all funny until it happens to you. Do it in the group, gossip, laugh, and then forget it! Why do it public and humiliate? Trolls aren't supposed to be a target to spoil someone's life.

I have seen this funny common trend. In the very first week of the page open, someone says they have a crush on admin. LOL. Some say the page is doing a good job, and some disagree. Some post the same things everywhere. Some keep complaining, no matter what. Some start posting writings. Some promote. Some demote. Some just like, some tag. Again, everything natural.

Whatever, coming to confessions, I just feel most of it is scripted drama like our reality shows. Some enjoy it, and it has to be taken lightly. I am not against who is into it, but neither do I like it. If it's your thing, it's your thing. Not my thing. Asshole.

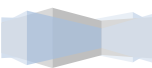

Nine

Professionalism Ki Maa-Behen

People always teach lessons. Some teach how to be, and some teach how not to be. Coming to my university, most taught me how NOT be. There was a selected few, lesser than a handful, from whom the lessons of 'how to be' and 'how to do' could be learned.

I learned how awkward it looks when repeatedly, someone is late to class. Of course, it was an advantage to students because the faculty was late, even students used to, and it always added with a cyclic time increase. I learned how ugly it looks when people don't put their effort into the jobs they were supposed to do. Again, many students wanted the process to be effortless, but it does not work that way in professionalism. I learned how being a senior and instead of leading the process if let loose, how it corrupts the entire system. I learned how hideous it looks when people take advantage of the system. I learned how some people don't value others' time and still don't feel even a little ashamed of it. The university taught me a lot of things about 'how not do' and 'how not to be.'

Doing for the sake of doing it - when higher in the ladder do that, everyone else copies. Most of the data was just morphed data. There were many things that were decorated in the documents and writings and not even near to real.

I know I have been complaining a lot about the system, but I am sorry I am not able to take it out of me. I don't know whom to blame because everyone around me looks alike. I guess I am the alien, and I am the odd man out. Maybe I should let loose on the protocol and chill. I tried, and I failed. These are things that I don't speak about to anyone. Because if I do, my friends are going to call me 'mansik'. However, I do have plans. I want to create a workable and ethical system for myself to work. I want to be in a place that makes sense. I want to be in a place where what matters, matters the most significant. I just can't keep my mouth shut from uttering 'assholes.'

If you have been thinking why I am I even talking about this, there is a reason. Charan did not like the system either. He was politely working hard to improve it. I have seen it. I guess I am the only one who has seen it. My peers are blind. So are my higher. So is most of everyone around.

Ten

The Cl-ass Trip

I don't know who gives the idea that they (am not sure who, we just pay money and get into the bus) always plan it to water places. It was only Charan who was shamelessly flaunting his body to everyone. Rest all of us were decent, at least I thought so. Since the moment we reached the beach, and we were in waters, he was shirtless. Until we got back into the bus. Asshole.

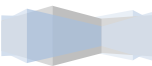

Okay, he made sure that none of the guys boozed as long as there were girls in the trip and allowed none of the girls to do that, who wanted to. I appreciate that though. I must mention Shreyas. He always roams around with Charan. They both are like best friends. I am sure not from school. Shreyas, another asshole. I hate the way he smiles. Feels like he has 64 teeth set. Okay, I don't want to be some -ist here, but what I see is what I say. Shreyas was totally behaving monkey on the trip – ask me not why I said that. Shreyas is annoying. He is like my uncle, who watches mobile videos on loudest volume, no matter where.

On this trip, we skipped breakfast, and no one complained about it. It was exciting to get into the water. We had a brunchaks (breakfast + lunch + snacks) around 5.00 pm. Everyone was 'I am going to eat you' hungry. Playing in the water had intensified it.

Needless to say, it was one hell of a trip after exams. We all needed a break to prepare well for the semester end coming up ahead.

They say we make a lot of memories from the class trip. Maybe I am going to make from the ones we are going to do in the future. But in this one, all I remember is shirtless Charan. How shameless is he? Isn't it? Asshole.

Eleven

Old Owl

My friends say I come from the old school.

They say my likes have been different.

My talks have been different.

My thoughts have been different.

I instead say they are all the same and foolish. There is no logic in what they do! They do because someone else does it. They spend more time taking pictures rather than appreciating where they are.

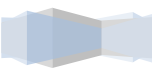

I have this friend. She gets something from the market, takes a picture, posts it online, and then she throws it away. There are some of her other friends (she always tell school friends when I ask) who reply to that, and then she gets lost in her phone. Once I had prepared papdi chat. She posted a picture of it and tasted a spoon. Then she got busy over the phone. Another day she was watching FRIENDS. All she watched was “I’ll be there for you.” She posted it online and then got immersed into the phone again. I just don’t understand my peers. My friends want to go on holiday just to take pictures. Yawn. I have this other friend who purchased a dress only to post pictures.

I like books over anything. I prefer pictures with less human in it. I prefer to preserve memories for myself. Not that I don't put pictures online at all. I do, and I have reasons for what I do. I don't blame anyone for anything. Everyone is correct, and it cant be questioned. But this is what I am. This is what I will be, and no one must have a problem with that too.

They cancel classes and spend time on Instagram. There are hardly people who work hard or be on time. People are different. They are different online and they are something else offline.

Assholes.

Twelve

The Screwed Monkey

There was this one day where Charan was hyper excited. We were in our third year. For most people, he looked the same, but I knew. Not for me. I see him every day. I know today he was different. He was dressed differently. He had new shoes. I could smell a different perfume. His regular was mild.

The very first thing I made sure that it was not his birthday. It wasn't. Then I checked out if it was any of his friend's birthdays. It wasn't. No status. No dedication. I stalked his other social profiles. Nothing. I checked out if it was any particular day or some sort of a day that calls for a celebration. Nothing. Just another day from May. There was literally nothing available and not even the slightest of hints.

Does he have a secret life? Is he hiding something from everyone? Maybe he is. Why else would he be so happy for no reason? Does he have a secret girlfriend? By secret I mean the ones we don't know about. Should I follow him in the evening and see if he goes out for some celebration? No, that would be too much. But maybe I can. As a classmate, I have the rights to take care of him. Won't I have?

I wanted to ask about this to someone, but what should I? That would lead to unnecessary discussion. Chaitra was already telling everyone that I stare at Charan a lot. I did not want unnecessary class things going on. I did talk with Shreyas. I was pretty sure that he would give out something if there were anything.

“Hey, Shreyas! You look excited! Party?”

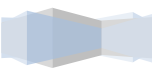

“Noting. Just a regular day!”

“Okay. Bye.”

“Bye”

But for lord's sake, how will I ever find out what's happening with him? Why is he so happy. I am sure there is something that he is not sharing with anyone. I am pretty sure! And knowing all that, I am helpless.

God knows why, but I could not find out. Maybe he was wearing new underwear! Asshole.

Thirteen

Backbencher and Nobencher

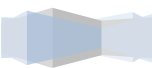

I have been now a backbencher. That makes sense to me. I like the way the degree has changed me. Charan has been a no-bencher. He hardly comes to classes. I see him on the campus. He sees me as well. I text him at times. He continued to be CR. We could not ask for a better and another. Or we did not want to. He is good at it.

We have been taking almost the same electives. I am not sure if I took first, and he opted for the same (why would he do that? I find no reason for that to happen) or if he took first, and then I opted for them (maybe. I do that sometimes). It's hard to tell. I just wanted to be in the same classes and coincidently we are.

He has been able to keep up with the things he started with. He still wears a lot of blacks. He comes to the classes irregularly. He still walks to the college. He still has been gym fit. He has still been a flirt. Not with anyone seriously but roams around with lots of girls. Okay, always around and with girls. He has been using the same bag for all four years. Okay, he had it for the first two years. Then, I don't remember seeing him with a bag anytime recently. Gosh, some people never change! What an asshole!

I am not sure why in my decisions and thoughts, Charan has a virtual role. Maybe, I am an asshole!

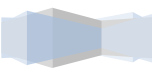

Fourteen

Lucky Ass

He sweeps a prize wherever he goes. I don't know when and how he does it. I have seen him doing exceptionally well in the class presentations. He talks like he is a pro. Any random presentations, he makes the best of it. From the second year, he has been a football team captain. He has represented our university. I am not sure since when I got an interest in football. He is so cool. I am so jealous. He still has the worst handwriting.

I don't remember a competition that he did not win. He has a good resume with pretty bad academic scores. And, I think though it might create a problem, he will skillfully manage it. Me, I had a pretty lousy resume with excellent academic scores. I don't know if we would ever balance and tally.

He has been a teachers pet. More than what I am for very different reasons. He talks well and presents himself decently. I am sure my teachers will remember him for a longer time than me. I am just another topper in the class. But who cares!!? All those teachers are assholes anyways.

If someone made my degree journey a little more colorful, I would credit it to Charan. What a boring name. I guess he is lucky to have me. I have seen him from the school days. He has changed from ‘totally a jerk’ to ‘can talk to asshole.’ He really must be lucky.

I could go on and on. I can talk about how I stalked him over different profiles. I can talk about how frequently I used to check his status messages. I can talk about how I agreed to every decision he made for the class. I can talk about how I liked all of his pictures (liked. Not on social media. I have liked them, and I keep it to myself). I can talk about how at times I used to zoom and watch his pictures. I can talk about how I made the best of every opportunity I had to initiate a conversation with him. I can talk about a lot of things. Hey, I have my privacy. Why should I express all that?

I like the type of jeans he wears. One lucky ass. Asshole.

*If you were studious,
Just like me,
I would have liked you.*

*If you were regular,
Came to class everyday,
I would have liked you.*

*If you were a reader,
We could discuss books,
I would have liked you.*

*If you were like me,
I would have been with you,
I would have liked you.*

*You are nowhere like me,
Don't even bother to know,
When the question is of,
"How can I like you?"
I don't know how,
I ended up loving you.*

*This is where I pause,
Reflect,
Analyze,
And call myself,
Asshole.*

*This I where I pause,
Reflect,
Analyze,
And call you,
"Asshole, do you love me too?"*

Fifteen

I Confess

Yes, we both are different and probably never meant to be together. That is my very own expert opinion. But a heart wants what it wants. Should I tell him? Or just leave it to time? But I have questions of my own.

*I wish,
I could see,
What you scribble,
On the last pages of your book!*

*I Wish,
I could see,
That there is,
My name scribbled on it.*

He is perfect, and I still never saw him being committed to a girl. Neither there were any rumors of him with any names. No one teased him. Maybe his friends did and not that I know of. Or Is he gay? I hope he isn't.

What's wrong with him? Okay, we are placed in the same company; we both will be far away in a different state – together (not that sort of together). I will confess to him during the training period. But, what if he does not join the company at all? What if he decides to go for higher studies? I think he will opt for higher education. His parents can definitely send him abroad. I am still kind of confused about how did we both (a topper and a useless) get placed in the same company, though.

Okay, I am going to call him right away!

[I pick up the phone and call him. I have a faster heartbeat as I hear the call ringing!]

The first ring - passed.

The second ring - passed.

At third,

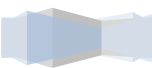

"Hello!"

"Hey, Hello!"

The End.

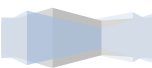

[If you would want to call it so.]

Do look out for

“I Fell in LOVE with a GEEK”

for the same story as told by Charan.
