The Void

First edition

2017

Preface

We all live with voids.

A lot of.

Void is emptiness.

Void is nothingness.

Void is eternal.

If there is anything that can occupy infinity, then it is void. Void is ever lasting, replacing in its forms.

Void has a meaning.

Void can be packed.

It can be filled with nothing, if we don't have anything. A void can have everything and still seem nothing. A void is a void, for any reason it is being called so.

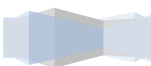

Void is a feeling.

Void is an entity.

Void is an object.

Void has resources.

Void makes fun.

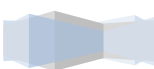

Void takes fun.

If there was nothing typed here, it would be a void, an empty document, still not opened or named, lost with its cause and undefined, unknown with its existence. I had every option to pick the set of words of my choice to fill this void and give the shape that I find the most pleasing.

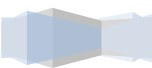

Yes, in the end, it's we, who decide to see what's actually in it!

The void after all, is not a just a void after all!

“Yes, Nothing”

“Tell me more about Nothing”

“Not a thing!”

Behind most kind of ‘nothing’, we all have a story that was once ‘everything’. The beauty of nothingness is that we get completely submerged into it. That is what the feeling of Void is. The V in Void silently says that it encompasses the ‘we’ in it. One is not alone and there is something else with it. May be another person, expectation, object, etc, that kind of else thing.

When we are left with a void, we are left behind with an opportunity. Void is happiness because we dig up an occasion to fill it with our wish. We could fill joy or otherwise. Or we could just leave it void. Either way one or the other is going to fill for us. It is always advisable that we have our void in our control and plug it the way we need.

Life giving us a void is god's way of allowing us to be a baby. When so is the case, why lose that fair-haired opportunity? One has to be a baby with open arms and grab along the happiness that comes its way. While in void, we see both joy and sorrow. The negative emotions being the strongest one always stand as a captain. A good keeper would always catch the right balls of happiness.

Once in a recurring while, life gives an opportunity to fall in love. Sometimes with books, sometimes with people, sometimes with something much unexpected and that is why we have voids. Voids make us fall in love and that is why life is beautiful!

Possibly this is the most unclear introduction chapter ever. There is absurdity. There is sort of irritation that switches the mind composition to the thoughts of – 'What the shit did I just read?' The aim of further chapters is to detail and convey what exactly introduction introduced. Here, we stand awaited, to explore the depth of the void.

We are going to find out how the voids are formed - sanely, insanely, and how are we supposed to fill them out - sanely, insanely.

02.Void, Just That!

“Have you ever tried to define ‘Nothing’?”

Let us make an attempt to define – ‘Nothing’.

Nothing is zero, nil, of no value.

Let us make an attempt to understand – ‘Nothing’.

Here we go! Absurdity begins!

Does it appear ridiculous to chatter about ‘nothing’ in pages length? Not anymore, to me atleast. Well, that is how it started. The way we hide so many things behind that word ‘Nothing’ was the motivation to explore it and understand the authentic sagacity of it. ‘Nothing’ deserves more than zero.

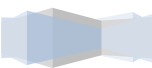

It’s just not only a thing.

A void is an empty space, not valid, something like that. It not exactly means ‘nothing’ but it points to something same. We often create voids in our life. Even if we don’t intend to, they just happen. What comes next is how we deal with them. The feeling of nothingness or empty, so forth, somehow becomes part of us.

The thing is that nothingness need not always be depressing or gloomy. Instead it can be an opportunity to set the twisted and tangled.

Like said, it's, just, not, only a, thing!

03.The Two Ends of Infinity

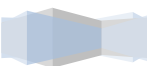

“I see the ends, that there are no ends!”

Have you ever wondered what the two ends of infinity would look like? Is it like going from somewhere unknown to somewhere not known? Has anyone searched for the two ends of infinity? Should we call it as going from ‘no where’ land to ‘no where’ land?

It does not take much time to realize that infinity does not have two ends unknown. We mostly know where it starts and we sure don’t know where it ends. So we have a known end and an unknown end.

Okay, we now have a changed perception. We have known the start and we don’t know the end. Do we need to struggle to know it? Do we need to wonder and search for where the end is? Or do we need to understand that there is no end unless we give a logical end?

*We cannot heal every pain,
We cannot erase every stain,
We cannot chase every shadow,
We cannot uplift every low,*

*There is a shadow,
While there is a light,
There is a friend,
While there is a foe,*

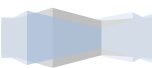

*When there is a friend,
There is a light,
There is a pain,
And still there is bright,*

*I stand at start,
I feel infinite,
I do my finest,
Calms down my sight!*

Yes, it's we who decide to see the end. We know the reason how the emptiness started in the first case. We understand the reason for our pain. We know how the feeling of nothingness got accumulated over time and stood out as a winner.

A void has an initial point. Then it just keeps moving. It ends when we decide to.

We cannot keep everything and everyone happy. We can try the best we can. That's how we can stay happy!

04.The Backfire Theory

“Void echoes. What did you put in?”

Speak ill and void fills with hate.

*When one is not being sarcastic,
Or atmosphere is no fun,
When one is totally unaware,
That the roast is on them,
If one is speaking ill about,
With no reason standing straight,
With only intention to hurt,
Then,
That is when,
The void gets crammed with hate.*

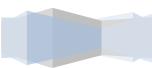

We might be clueless and it might just be a random act, but what was done was not done well. The unkind words occupy the void and keep wondering.

What we fill with void will eventually hit back us. It is the void we own, for we devise its shape and size. It is the one we carry along. If we make it see the hate, it will make us see the hate. We give the hate and we get back the hate. As simple as that!

Why does one fill the void with complains about others? Does it gain sympathy? Is that form of sympathy ever needed to anyone? What do we intend to achieve with that? It's never too late to think and act.

If void were ever to speak, I am sure it would have said,
“Speak no hate, listen no hate”.

05.We Don't know, What We Know!

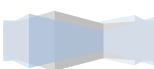

“Is it Blue? Or Sky? Or Water? Or a Painting? Okay, let's ask!”

There is one with no sleeves who wants to display the new tattoo and another who has covered it because he wants to keep the burnt arm hidden. We all have full sleeve and no sleeve days. It's better if we don't judge on someone unless one is paid to do it or asked to do it.

A dull sad day can walk in at anytime of the month, even amidst the happiness. At times we feel like have made a shift to altogether new universe over night. It's like 'there' and 'not-there' are playing a hide and seek with appear-disappear act. And off course, it's all a play of temporary time.

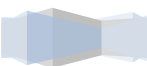

The one who is having fun might have just come out of depression. The one who seems to be smiling hard, even for little things, might have been really happy after a long time. That other one might have just stepped out of rubbish life struggles. The one who is acting like manic might have just got the promotion news. The one who seems happy with music lyric might have realized something beautiful.

Let's not judge. It is not our routine.

People have had reasons to behave in a meticulous fashion. There is no reason to be judgmental. If one is unbearably curious to know, then it is better to ask than to just assume random things. However, as most would agree, it would be best to 'just let go' from all the judgmental behaviors! If you really know what I mean!

Well, all those happy ones have just filled their void with happiness and we have no reasons to be awful just because we aren't happy. Happiness is a full blown balloon. It just needs a prick to burst.

06.Voids of Detachment

“The thin lines of thick happiness between attach and detach”

It is not necessary that life has to present us with void giving us the opportunity to fill up something. At times we stand responsible to create a void.

Life cannot be without the people we care. It's this attachment that adds meaning to life. If people change and if that attachment is only bringing the pain, it's certainly best time to de that attachment. We all have our limits of care. If the person at the other side expects more freedom and that is what the new happiness is, then that is when we give away with it.

This is when we create a void for our self. We cannot keep destroying our self for the care we do for other. This is one of most difficult forms of void and can easily destroy one. But that is inevitable and the need. That void is essential.

There is a difference between going to depression and going to void. When in void, one will create a space and find a new love. As an unusual change, loving thyself could be it too. It's not easy. Certainly not. But it is the inevitable. It's not easy doing a work solely for self satisfaction, with no expectations of some one's appreciation. It's not impossible as well. Anyone who says is doing it, is not actually doing it. Self Satisfaction things are mostly unsaid and unknown.

If there is no one ready to accompany for a movie, then it's not about complaining, it's about watching something else reachable or going alone. A popcorn or cold drink is always a best company. We are not here to force an idea. We are here to find the other who would agree to our idea of fun. The inner acceptance of this reality is the actual idea of fun.

Have you ever got a cake for yourself on your birthday when you knew no one else would possibly get it? Or when you just wanted your favorite cake for your birthday? Nothing can stop one being happy on one's own birthday.

It's these little things of pleasure that eventually makes the life beautiful. Be in it. Welcome the void!

07.Happiness is 'Happiness'

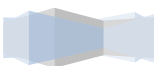

"Self sacrifices are soulful satisfactions! Ehh?"

Self sacrifice is a loaded term. It comes in many terms and conditions. You know, we are not gods. May be no one cares even if we are one. Some of the sacrifices are good if they are worth it. But it does not mean life has to be a selfless sacrifice.

Okay. Let someone else, some day make some sacrifices for their soulful satisfactions. Okay. Self sacrifices are not actually that. They are.... Okay. Not in mood to see definition or listen some lecture. Sacrificing that.

The bottom line is they have to be limited enough. Especially not with goals, dreams, food, sleep, fun, books etc. But hey, there will be sacrifices. Especially with goals, dreams, food, sleep fun, books, etc. When those sacrifices are made, that is when voids are created. Now those voids need an alternate path. The thing is, how are we compensating the sacrifices we have made? The question is, have we found out an alternative channel? Where are those headed at?

Happiness can be many little and many large things. Amidst them, sometimes we forget that happiness is 'happiness'. Period.

08.The Drama of Dreams

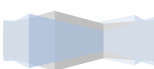

“Talking about dreams, dreams don’t talk!”

Dreams are the most quite things. You don’t talk or think about it a day, they silently disappear. They don’t feel bad even if you don’t touch them on for years. They are the most humble and modest creatures created ever. They prefer low talks. They prefer to stay behind the curtains for a long time. They prefer to show up only when they find meaning.

When we embrace them, they are the most joyful things. They bring the world together. They make one see the most meaningful things of life. Something unexplained, something larger than life.

Dreams are as well dramatic. If we are not talking about them on daily basis, then no else is. They die soon. When they die, the best part is ‘nothing happens’. Nothing changes. No one mourns. Thousands and more die every day. The one thing which everyone is most successful at is killing dreams.

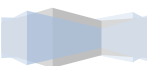

How many have you killed so far? How many can find a life again? If you are not talking about it then no one else is.

*I have a dream,
To keep my dreams,
Awake and alive,
It makes me strive,
It makes me live,
I am me,
For my dreams,
I am not me,
For my dreams,
I am,
My dreams.*

This one is one of the largest voids. If one needs a constant motivation to fill this void, then it's not a real one! One is just fooling around.

Today, I write this one. I am not sure if I will be able to write tomorrow but today I can, so I write!

09. Like That. A little by Little.

“Curiosity calls Curiosity”

“I am not listening to you. I need to know it myself!”

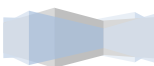

Probably that is what every baby thinks. It needs to experience on its own to conclude something. A baby has lots of voids, a hundreds a day maybe. It does not fail to fill them. It works through each and every one of them.

It is curious to know, why it needs to stretch its hands to grab something. It is curious of different sounds. It is curious about how and why to eat. It is curious about curiosity. No wonder a baby finds every single day a cheerful one. It has everyday to explore.

I really don't know how and when we lost the innocence of curiosity in the process of growing up. Life has infinite things to be curious about. There is always something new to explore. But we don't. We just stop. We stop thinking and limit our self on our maximum. No one has told us the maximum. It's just we. We do it for our self and proudly kill our curiosity capabilities.

Which last book you read did not let you sleep?

Which last movie you saw made you cry?

Which last path you walked got you memories?

Which last song you heard was close to your heart?

What was the last thing that inspired you?

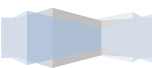

What was your latest personal project?

When was the last time you had a detailed long talk with your bestie?

How long was your last?

Days? Months? Years?

You answer that; you know the relationship between you and curiosity. Something atleast! These are some “I miss you” voids that we create and we fill. They must happen.

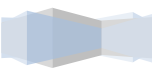

10.It's Not Like That!

“Like u say, like they think, like I know, like that is!”

Often when we get hurt it won't be the said reason. It will be something else that takes over some silly reason. It is the mind that accumulates pressure over time and needs something small to come out as tears and burst out. Mostly it's because of the salsa of 'expectations'.

As happily as one wants to hurt someone, as happily one wants to get hurt. There is blame at both sides. But when such events occur, the best way to handle them is by not passing them to third. We don't want to blame someone again and repeat the cycle. Instead one has to opt for something that soothes the heart. May be its time to enjoy lyrics of the song or watch a favorite movie or talk a walk outside with a friend. In doing all that, amidst, watch something emotional and cry the things off.

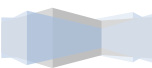

You know how at times we cry even for small emotional scenes at movies? That's not entirely the scene. That also has a part from our real life event. That is also some other emotional accumulation coming out.

When we are hurt, we create a void. What matters is how we are going to fill that void! Void then has to see the strength. It has to fill in to do better for tomorrow. It has to serve a purpose.

Void is humanity. Void is a dream. Void is an unstable mind looking for something it does not know. It is like going through the days of complaints. It feels like everyone is complaining. Then it is about two people talking and sharing that makes one feel better and good. Now that puts forth a question. Do you have the one where you can talk about any shitty things and be certainly positive that those things will remain confined and not talked about elsewhere? In the worst case there is always a personal journal one can keep.

The bottom line is – ‘Cry in the Closed’. That is how a void shines.

11.Failures? What's That?

“Failures are only a filthy people's gossip”

If there are questions that void keeps constantly asking, then one of them is – “When was the last time you failed?”

Void needs failures. That is how it fills up with goodness. If you don't fail, what will filthy people gossip about? Don't you want to give them talk topics along with the evening snacks?

How will you make people around you feel good?

By failing!

Every time you fail, there will be happy people around. They compare and feel better. They feel happy that their life is going on a good track. Indirectly you are making others happy. Now when you fail, you might cry a day or two but look at success it has brought to the environment.

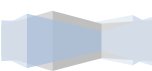

In the long run, you failed, you learnt, you got better, you found your true friends, you found true meaning of many unknown things, you got experiences, you understood life better, you got mature, you had fun, you cried, you felt the world was hideous place to live, you loved things which you have never loved before, oh my god many other things. So, tell me. Who won? Who should be happy?

You know how that little boil on a huge body can still hurt? No one would know how irritating it is internally but that little boil is still has significant impact. So how are the frequent failures! Little, little ones. They are the tiny voids. That said, they are not ignore-tiny.

Okay. Last time I failed writing poetry. Two days later I penned one that got accepted to be published in an anthology. What's your story?

12.The Thoughts That Weigh

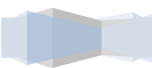

“There is no free Lunch. There is no free thought as well.”

I have read and learnt that – “Carrying thought of a person is like carrying that person as well”. What I have analyzed is that there are no free thoughts. They are always attached to few or more things. They are influencers.

Like say, if I carried the thoughts of God along me, I would think, what would God do when I get into a fix? Would God accept the apology? Would God be kind enough to forgive? Would God nod to gossip? Would God support the unjust? Would God fight back? What if I carried a demon and not the God?

Thoughts influence us. They shape our decisions. Every time they fly, they bring something back. Sometimes they change shape. Sometimes they get old and die. The root of void is a thought, a thought of nothingness. Then there is a tree of nothingness. This tree has got some fruits. It fruits based on the kind of water and manure it gets.

We are only repeating the same old things. But this time we are naming it as – ‘thought’. Otherwise the story is the same. The gist is the same.

13. While I had a Chance

“To Not-To-Do something, If I have a reason today, there will be something stronger tomorrow”

What’s your reason?

“Oh, I can’t go home for festival this year, But hey, you know what, Next year I sure will!”. Trust me, 99%, next year there will be something else to stop that from happening.

I know we try our best. Sometimes it becomes inevitable. But if the inevitable is happening every single time, is there not something really wrong?

Yes, there is always a next time. But if it was not tried this time, it will not be tried next time. But anyways there will be next time. But it won’t be tried next time too. In that case, what is the use of having the next time? It’s like, you see and still you don’t have it. What’s the use?

“I was motivated to do it. But then this happened. Then I failed”. Really? That this is the reason? Well, then there was no motivation.

“I wanted to call and wish on his birthday. But then I forgot and too much work!”.

Really? That’s the reason?

“I thought I will reply it later but then I forgot!” Really? That’s how it works every single time?

“I thought I would eat cake then I felt I am too lazy to go and get one” Really? That easily it is given up?

‘Getting used to’ is very dangerous. It is dangerous enough to make one hastily lazy.
Like:

Now I don’t wish for birthdays at all

I don’t attend any social gatherings at all

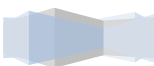

I don’t read any books at all

Etc etc all

I am lazy all in all!

These things come by very easily. But a void would sure be no happy of it.

One has to remember that a researcher always has increasing number of problems to solve. Here comes the best part. You call it or not, you say it or not, we all are ‘Researchers’.

14.The Story of the Broken

“The beauty of fallen is that, It is now rising!”

Someone might be already broken. Deep down, deep below, deep deep.

*It's just these things,
Don't seem right,
It's just these torn wings,
I just can't fight.*

*It's not like I did wrong,
I tried,
Was I wrong?
I just tried.*

*I walk, talk, eat,
I sleep as well,
I just feel defeat,
I don't just tell.*

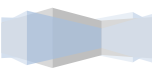

*Dark doesn't scare,
Light, I don't care
Say shit things
Ahh, I just don't care.*

*With all the wrongs,
This is my happy song.*

Don't rip more. They are going through a void. They don't need sadness, anymore!
Sometimes when we know someone is not going through a good phase, it does not make any sense to dig deep around it.

"Good Luck, Rise Back" will do. Or talking something else apart from failures will also do. Even silence.

15.The Dance of the Void

“Can you dance to imaginary beats of time?”

When was the last time you were happy for no reason? When was it you thanked god before going to bed for giving a wonderful day? When was it when the smile silently danced without giving out any expression out? That is the dance of the void.

Void does not need any reason to be happy other than being alive. It just needs a reason to be happy, every single day, amidst all the worries of life! The reason of being alive.

It's a desire to watch a movie at the mid of the night and watching it

It's a desire to sit alone for a while

It's a desire to sing a song with crazy lyrics

It's a desire to take a break and tour

It's a desire to cook something different and delicious

It's a desire to do a new course

It's a desire to dance in the closed room with super crazy steps

It's a desire to laugh just for the sake of laugh

It's a desire to watch something online

It's a desire to revisit the favorite soap

It's a desire to brush the teeth just to stand in front of the mirror and do some weird actions

It's a desire to wash clothes

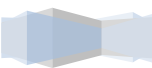

It's a desire to express something

It's a desire to love

It's a desire to desire that life is not over and wish for infinite more desires

Void listens to no music. Silence is the music. The purest form of it. Then the void dances to silence. For void, it's the silence. For an audience, it's the music they imagine.

16.The Life Days

“Polish for bright. Not to get blind.”

Every day we wear and tear. We get polished. If we polish our self way too much, the excess brightness can kill us.

Recollect all the gyan of “Too much is too bad” things, examples and stories.

Now, where is void in all this? It’s about understanding when the void is full and when to start a new void. Oh yeah. That happens as well. There is no use in filling up an already full void. It means one has to branch out and expand. That is the basic theory of life. Share when full!

A void is a repo of knowledge and experiences. When we feel that this knowledge and experience can be applied to another field, which is when we know that a void is full. Knowledge has to get shared and the base has to expand.

I paint on glass. I can paint on a cloth too!

17.The Table of Merits

“I am mess. So will be my table. My plate. My eat. My see. ”

How cluttered is your work table? That is where the happiness is. In the mess. We need worries coming from many ends of the table to keep our self productive. How much of those clutters smile? How many stories those clutters hold? Does it have the laughs and cries?

An organized table is an organized table. A cluttered table is a creative chaos. Whenever I organize my study table, I really don't know how and when, in a shot span of time, the table gets cluttered itself. “Is it some messy ghost?” Sometimes I wonder. Then I feel may be it just works that way.

An organized table is an organized table. A cluttered table is a search-me puzzle. Amongst all misplace and disorganization, I exactly know where to search for the missing. That is the best part of a cluttered table. When I feel I have lost it, I get a new one. New is happiness.

An organized table is an organized table. A cluttered table is an identity. I don't believe in showing off clean when I am really not. When things shine and some catch dust, which is who I am. I have my favorites and they change from time to time. I know when to clean my thing!

An organized table is an organized table. A cluttered table is a space for invention. Ahhh, I see a void. Don't you?

A table should invoke some inventive voids. It should allow one to think beyond the table. It should allow one to dream. Clutter or organized are just some medium. Just because I favor clutter and speak about it, it does not mean it will work for all. We need to go with what works the best in us.

Oh, you don't have a table? You got a bed? Happy sleeping!

18.The Duty Call

“I do it as I do. You see it as you do.”

It's the rain. The way it pours down to the earth. The way it then goes back up to form the clouds. It's the transformation between that up and down. It's the play of forms.

But you see not everyone likes the rain. Not the dogs which have given birth to pups and they are drowning in rain. Not the one who has fallen sick. Not the one who has dressed up well and the plan was to head out. That does not lead to the conclusion that 'rain isn't good'.

Is the rain Bad?

Don't know.

Is the rain good?

Don't know.

The question is, 'What does the rain feel?' That is what matters. Rain is doing its duty.

It means, well, you know.

A void does its duty. It gives an opportunity. Does it look good or bad?

19. Not All Stories Are Told

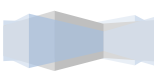

“We all have stories. The common struggles are told.”

But no one knew he spent his college and study life with no specific bed room. The couch placed in hall attached to the nearby table was his bedroom. Adjusting and living in the noises and disturbances was the only way to move ahead. No matter how hard the night was, day time had no room to rest or sleep. But the sacrifices were never expressed. Everything at outset was so perfect and the results were sprouting out good.

It could have been a life of complaints. It wasn't. May be it was because the results mattered more than how and where they came from. Also because it was known that there will be no column in the exam paper which would ask- 'how comfortable is life?'. The society is curious of results. Not how it was achieved. Strange. Isn't it?

Is it why because there are some stories that are never told?

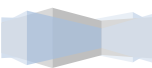

We all have struggle stories. You know what makes it meaningful? When one hits the success! That is when everyone gets curious of the struggle stories. Otherwise it is just a struggle. One would find even a phrase “Ha ha, Life!” as most powerful quote if it comes from a successful celebrity.

Okay, what is your story? What about your ‘success void’? Have you started filling it?

Or working towards it?

20.The Absurdity

“I love abstractions. It can have addition and subtractions. Okay, A lot of math.”

To all those who ask irrelevant questions, answer them with irrelevant answers. For all those who answer with irrelevant things, reply them back more irrelevant things. Concerned will cry. Let them.

Assume things that make you happy when there is no answer. Life is an abstraction. That is what defines an unconditional happiness. There is also this closely related term called absurdity.

Putting everything together we can call it as an “abstraction of absurdity”. No more questions taken. Time up! We head to the concluding thoughts.

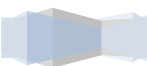

Concluding Thoughts

Void definition somewhere leads to defining perfection. There is nothing called perfect. It's already quite old when said – “Don't search for perfection, Learn to live perfectly with imperfections!”. So, let's still call it nothingness.

However, void supports the imperfection. It is a way of accepting life as it comes.

What it all ends with is –

How much of you, is really you?
